Marble

Filetto
Rosso

In early 1800s: the Ute Indians saw the "white rock" but had no use for it.

1874: Sylvester Richardson, a geologist and founder of Gunnison, visited the present site of Marble and discovered the marble rock.

1874: George Yule, prospecting in the area, later sheriff of Gunnison County, "rediscovered" the marble beds, which were then named Yule Marble.

Emperador

1879: After the Meeker Massacer the Utes were moved out of Colorado and the area opened to white settlement.

1880: John Mobley, former Indian scout, with his wife and two children, built a cabin at the west edge of Beaver Lake.

1881: W.F. Mason, William Woods, and Mobley founded town of Clarence east of Carbonate Creek.

One of Marble's most visible landmarks, the tower and its bell, stood and rang for nearly 65 years between 1912 and 1977 as part of the town's fire alarm system. Twenty-five years after its demise, the Marble Historical Society undertook the reconstruction of an exact replica of the tower in its original location being completed 17 July 2010.

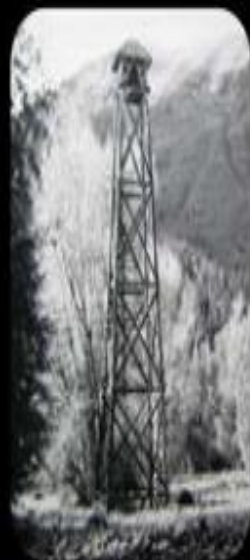

Marble

Golden Sinai

1887: There was much public interest in the marble, with tests showing it had a crushing point of 14,500 pounds per square inch, harder than any marble in the world. * The Denver & Rio Grande Railroad arrived at Carbondale.

1888: Colorado Midland Railroad arrived at Carbondale and had financial interests in the marble beds.
